They both feature hundreds of tools that help you create and edit images. The big difference is that Photoshop is designed primarily for photographers while Photoshop Elements is designed for non-professional photographers. Adobe Photoshop Most of the time, when you go to Photoshop, you're actually using Photoshop Elements. This is because Photoshop is designed to be a more sophisticated tool for professional photographers. It is a more powerful tool for photographers, and it is something you won't really need to use for most simple image editing tasks. Photoshop Elements, on the other hand, is designed to make complicated tasks simple. While it does include the entire power of Photoshop, you won't need a ton of the features. Many people use Photoshop for more complex tasks such as digital painting. Photoshop is the full powerhouse of all the professional grade features and has a bunch of individual tools to help you create full sized images from scratch or edit images inside of a canvas. Photoshop Elements Photoshop Elements is designed for hobbyists and non-professional photographers. It doesn't have many of the features that Photoshop does, but it does have a lot of features to help you create high-quality images for any type of project you're working on. It is capable of producing very high-quality images in most cases. Diffs and Merges Images can be merged into each other using Photoshop. What it can do is amazing. Photoshop also has a tool called the Diff tool that will let you see any differences in two images. If you have two images, you can see exactly what changes have been made to each side. You can even do a quick side-by-side comparison. Color Matching One of the most useful tools in Photoshop are the Match Color options.
