The other part is a common factor that can be determined based on the theoretical capacity of the machines. * In this situation, it is possible that the message rate is greater than the number of messages per minute that the scan algorithm can allow before the message is buffered. In such a case, the message rate will be substantially equal to the number of messages per minute multiplied by the scan delay period. By modifying the parameters of the load balance algorithm, you can have high throughput but also minimal delays. It is possible to achieve either of these results, but depending on the nature of the data and the nature of the network, one of these two results may be more desirable. It is important to know, however, that altering the parameters can change the balance that results. * When you

As scientists become members of our public, they will encounter public events, in which a public conversation occurs in front of an audience. Events can range from an interview on a science podcast to a meeting with a high-profile scientist. However, the dynamics of interactions between scientists and the public often remain poorly understood. We seek to contribute to this inquiry by developing a new framework for understanding the social dynamics of public events, expanding it in order to examine the materiality of public events, and applying it to understand the recent engagement between scientists and members of the public at the American Chemical Society meeting in Philadelphia in 2016. We wish to understand the social dynamics of public events, including the dynamics of who speaks and to whom. Events are composed of an eventer (the scientist) and public, who can vary in their ability to shape the event. The division between science and society (or between knowledge and action) has traditionally taken place within the confines of university departments, laboratories, and conferences. However, scientists are entering the public sphere, and meetings with the public, such as the American Chemical Society meeting in Philadelphia, are now more common. The public sphere is a social space where conversation occurs, which has a material and temporal dimension. We will investigate the connections between the material and social dimensions of public events through an analysis of public engagement at the ACS Philadelphia meeting. The objectives of
