Update: I had tried the following but it did not work... import urllib import pycurl URL = " request = urllib.urlencode({"genre":"japanese","author_id":2, "id":"mybooksearch","searchid":"randomtext"}) A: You can use pycurl's urlopen method, which will open up a new HTTP request and decode the response correctly. For example: import urllib import pycurl url = " ch = pycurl.Curl() ch.setopt(pycurl.USERAGENT, "Mozilla/5.0 (Windows; U; Windows NT 6.0; en-US; rv:1.9.0.3) Gecko/2008040115 Firefox/3.0.3") ch.setopt(pycurl.URL, url) ch.setopt(pycurl.QUERY, "genre=japanese&author_id=2&id=asdf") ch.setopt(pycurl.POST, False) ch.setopt(pycurl.WRITEFUNCTION, urllib.urlencode) ch.perform() the headers part I added is just for the headers so it knows what kind of language they speak. The setopt(pycurl.WRITEFUNCTION, urllib.urlencode) will make sure that the headers are correctly encoded. And I also changed your get request to a post request in case the last page they send you to requires a login.

EDIT: The main problem is that you are putting the username and password within the request parameters. This method is not secure, you should consider using a separate API to make these requests. One example of a secure API is
